Gendered multilingualism in highland Daghestan: story of a loss. Journal of Multilingual and Multicultural Development, 40 ii (2019) pp. 115-132. "We show that historically, men were more multilingual than women, but this was not true to the same extent for all languages ... We show that during the twentieth century local L2s were gradually displaced by Russian, and Daghestanian multilingualism lost its gendered character. We argue that these changes were caused by the introduction of Soviet schooling."
