6119 GERBER, Noah S. Can Damascus 1840 be re-oriented? From Shami historical memory to Sephardi and Mizrahi agency. Journal of Modern Jewish Studies, 20 i (2021) pp. 95-116. Demonstrates how the direct beneficiaries of the [Damascus blood libel of 1840], the Shami (Syrian and specifically Damascene) Jews, while gracious to their European "saviours", attributed in fact no meaning to this event in their own communal construction of the past.

6128 TSUR, Yaron. Who introduced liberalism into the Damascus Affair (1840)? Center, periphery and networks in the Jewish response to the blood libel. Jews, liberalism, antisemitism: a global history. Ed. Abigail Green, Simon Levis Sullam. Cham: Palgrave Macmillan, 2020, pp. 263-287. "Drawing on new sources that illuminate the views of local protagonists, their social context and motivations, this chapter unsettles that traditional view of the Damascus blood libel and sheds new light on the role of European and pseudo-European Sephardi networks, the networks and corridors of the Western and the Ottoman worlds where their influence had consequences, the use of liberal rhetoric and the roots and subsequent evolution of Western power in the region."
