centres on Ibn Shihāb al-Zuhri's (d. 124/742) statement, 'We were averse to writing down knowledge until these rulers forced us to (accept) it, and therefore we thought it best not to forbid it to any Muslim'."

al-Kitāb: about the historicity of transmission below the common link level. Islam at 250: studies in memory of G. H. A. Juynboll. Ed. Petra M. Sijpesteijn

"... I will attempt to show that apart from the general meaning, or the 'gist' of traditions, scrutinizing textual details, even the minutest ones, may contribute significantly to the reconstruction of the matn at the various stages of its textual evolution. I will argue that by applying form-critical approaches, we may indeed be able to trace the history of a tradition and its constituent motifs below the CL [common link] level, that is, navigate our path into the murky domain of the single-strand asānīd."
